New Bridge - Intersection Under Construction At 20-Mile Bend

A new bridge is now under construction near the intersection of U. S. 88 and U. S. 441 on Twenty Mile Bend, according to Joe Langford, vice president of Cleary Brothers Construction Company, West Palm Beach.

Approaches for the bridge will be built by Ruben Construction Co., sub-contractor for Cleary Brothers.

Bids for the 28 foot wide bridge were opened and accepted jointly by the SRD and the FCD for $108,244.85, January 26, this year.

Approximately 1 1/4 years ago the SRD requested County Commissioner E. W. "Bud" Weaver to have the signs for the interchange of commerce for both Belle Glade and Pahokee to be taken down from their locations at the present construction site within 24 hours. "And we did it in a rain storm," said Commissioner Weaver.

At that time, however, sufficient funds were not allocated by the FCD to cover their part of the bid.

and for that reason the bid was turned down, according to Langford.

Langford said that his firm won that first bid also and after some radical changes were made in the plans to lower the cost of the construction a second bid was asked for and accepted.

Adjacent to the bridge construction site work is progressing to widen and deepen the canal and build a levee, according to Dale Morrison, president of Morrison Trucking Co., of Venice. The canal work is a separate bid let by the Corp. of Engineers.

Test piling can be seen marking the location of the bridge which will feature a modern perpendicular intersection and eliminate the present curve-intersection combination.

All that is holding us up now," said Langford, "is the prestressed material, which should be ready in a week for ten days. Construction is expected to be completed within 30 days after receiving the prestressed materials, he concluded.

Modern intersection to be built.

Dredging enlarges canal — built levee.

Pillars mark location of new bridge in relation to old.

Lake Level - Fishing Rules Topics Of Council

Changes in commercial fishing regulations on Lake Okechobee and the proposed plan to raise the water level of the lake were the main topics at the regular monthly meeting of the Lake Okechobee Fish and Wildlife Advisory Council held at the Glades Restaurant in Clewiston on April 22.

Regulation changes, some of which were recommended by the Council to the Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission, were explained by Game Commission personnel. The regulation prohibiting wire castfish traps within 500 feet of aquatic vegetation and also the seven inch length limit on castfish were removed. Commercial fishermen will now be allowed to fish 1500 hours during daylight hours and an unlimited number at night. Action was taken by the Commission on these changes at its official meeting in Ft. Myers on April 25th by emergency order.

The council reshaped the Corps of Engineers proposed plan to raise the water level of Lake Okechobee with Questions being answered by Game Commission Biologists Bill Cole and Larry Shanks on the River Basin Study, based on their review of the proposed project plan.

The date and place of the next Advisory Council was left open, and Charles Corbin, representative from Belle Glade, said that any one having comments or information pertinent to the Council contact him at 994-3644 or P. O. Box 38, Belle Glade.

THOUGHT OF THE WEEK

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE IS THE HAND THAT RULES THE WORLD.

SENSING THE NEWS

By Thurman Sensing

EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT

Southern States Industrial Council

The virtual collapse of Columbia University in New York during late April as a result of terrorization by members of the leftwing Students For a Democratic Society is an ominous sign of impending anarchy in the United States.

At Columbia, a small segment of radicals - aided by hooded Maoist Chief Charles Koyats of Harlem and professional agitators Stokely Carmichael and Ray Brown - destroyed the good order and normal ways of a university with more than 27,000 students. The office of the president of Columbia, one of the great universities in America, was captured by the violent minority who demand virtual authority over the university in future.

Hopefully, the American people will derive a shock of recognition from the dramatic scene on the Columbia campus. The situation on the campus at Monticello Heights is a last of what could happen at every campus in the land if there is not a firm application of law and order and if toleration of anarchists and campus hoodlums is not ended forthwith.

Around the world, communists and anarchists are sparking similar college and university takeovers. In Italy, for example, 23 of the 27 universities have suffered campus rebellions and seizures of university property. It is shocking and almost incredible that responsible people in any civilized land would let the seeds of learning be turned into political chaos and places of host-taking.

What Americans are seeing today are the ugly fruits of the permissive philosophy - the philosophy that says tolerance is the highest virtue and must be carried to any length. The disorders have been in the making for a number of years. People in high places have encouraged policy against lawlessness, mobs. They have insisted that protesters have more rights than law-abiding people. If the United States continues to go the way it is going, granting unlimited tolerance to leftwing agitators, the Republic will collapse into anarchy. The infection of anarchy is spreading because little or nothing is done to stop it.

Certainly, the officials of Columbia University are at fault for failing to crack down hard when the disorders started.

ed. Rebellious and destructive students should have been expelled from the university and charges filed against them if they did not leave the campus. The police should have been called into the campus when the rebels began to barricade themselves into university buildings.

Had strict action been taken at the beginning, the disorders would have been crushed in the bud. That's the only way to handle any type of campus riot or insurrection against constituted authority. Maximum lawful force should be used against those engaged in unlawful activity.

The authorities at Columbia are not the only students to blame. Authorities at Duke University were equally lax in their handling of the disorders when they failed to crack down hard on students attempting to disrupt university classes.

What has happened at Columbia University cannot be duplicated in a country that believes in responsible freedom. Order is too valuable to be sacrificed to the whim of a handful of anarchists, professional wreckers of our society.

Unquestionably, the broad mass of the American people are moving toward a massive reaction. They will insist on restoration of order and decency by any means. No one wants authoritarian rule in the United States. No one wants to go overboard. But unless there is swift and resolute action against law-breakers and campus anarchists, the country is likely to end in a police state. Pulitzer-Prize winning columnist Edgar A. Snodgrass has summed up the situation, saying: "One thing I am sure of: violence cannot be tolerated. It is the enemy of democracy. For in the long run, people will accept an authoritarian regime that is essential to a democracy that cannot or will not."

This great "liberal" should understand that anarchy in America must be suppressed and stopped now.

By Dr. William C. Emerson

EDITOR'S NOTE

The author of this account of the Seminole Indian Green Corn Dance, Dr. William C. Emerson, a Rome, New York, physician and surgeon, is the first white man to have witnessed this important rite. Dr. Emerson, in the "Who's Who" section of the REFERENCE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF THE AMERICAN INDIAN, has written extensively on American Indian folklore including that of Alaska. He traces his interest in Indian folklore to his boyhood when his mother was a teacher at the Rose Bud Indian (Sioux) Reservation in South Dakota. He spends several months each year in the Everglades and has published several books on the SEMINOLE DWELLERS OF THE EVERGLADES; THE LAND OF THE MIDNIGHT SUN (Alaska); and LIFE AND CALL OF THE EVERGLADES, a collection of three Seminole folk stories.

In the summer of 1965, Dr. Emerson flew from Rome, New York, to Ft. Lauderdale, rented a car, and drove to Moore Haven on the western shore of Lake Okechobee. From Moore Haven, Dr. Emerson drove thirty miles north to the Brighton Indian Reservation. From there he was driven by his Indian guide thirty-four miles through Okechobee and across a trackless area to the site where the Seminoles were to hold their Green Corn Dance.

Dr. Emerson, now seventy-four years old, suffered great privations in order to witness the famed dance. He ate only canned and Puritan brand food, wore a heavy raincoat, and slept fitfully on an elevated wooden platform while the Indians danced and sang in revelry. Dr. Emerson's account of his days gives an intimate picture of Seminole life at festival time.

The Florida Seminoles Indians are a resilient people. For many years they have lived on their reservations, located in the Florida Everglades, perfectly happy and content, minding their own business and white men only at times when they are in need of work in order to obtain money for the purchase of the necessities of life.

Prior to the arrival of the Seminoles in Florida, they belonged to the Creek confederacy of tribes which lived in Alabama and Georgia. This settled agricultural people had an ancient feud with the Creek Indians. The autumn festival was a time for renewing social ties and a time of amnesty for criminals. Old plots were broken, new fires were lit, new clothing was put on, and religious ceremonies were performed. The ceremony lasted from four to eight days, depending on the size of the settlement. The festivities included the drinking of the Green liquid and a mock execution. Dances, imitations of animals or the hunt were performed, and some accounts tell of the choosing of new marital partners in a dance.

From the time the Seminole Indians settled in Florida, in 1750, they continued to have many customs and ceremonies which they had inherited for many years before coming to Florida. The first record of a Green Corn Dance in Florida was in the spring of 1841 during the war between the Seminole Indians and the United States. During the ceremonies at this dance a council of the remaining chiefs decreed death to any white man found dividing the secrets of their sacred dance.

The site of the Green Corn Dance is selected by the Seminole Indians. It is more from time to time according to the Medicine Man of the Cow Creek Seminole Indians, Frank Shore, the Green Corn Dance, which is celebrated each year on the Brighton Indian Reservation. The dance is held in the same area for the past forty years.

The Green Corn Dance is held by the Seminoles when the corn ripens in the early summer about the first of June or the first of July. The time is selected according to the new phase of the moon, which Seminoles call "Everything Green."

Each group of the major Seminole tribes, Cow Creek, Big Cypress, and Tamiami Trail, which celebrates the festival of the Green Corn Dance, has a different name. Having tried for ten years to obtain permission to attend the Green Corn Dance, finally, through the help of a friend, the author was able to obtain permission to attend the Green Corn Dance. The author was accompanied by his wife, Mrs. Emerson, and his son, John, who was born on June 29, 1965, he met his mother and father at the Brighton Indian Reservation. John Toby very obligingly took control of my car and drove me to the town of Okechobee twenty miles east of the Brighton Indian Reservation. There we turned, and he drove me north on a paved road.

Driving slowly about four miles on the paved road we finally came to an area in the pine woods that was the site of the dance. Having gone down and up a fairly large ditch, on the right side of the road, John Toby opened a gate and drove into a large open area containing many palm trees and an occasional pine tree.

After driving about ten miles through the palm trees, we came to an area where there was a collection of huts. These huts, at the place where the Green Corn Dance is held each year, are not thatched as are most of the Seminole Indian huts. The huts are used only five or six days each year, and it would not be worth the trouble to build thatched huts. Instead, a tarpaulin is thrown over the ridgepole and the sides are made of palm fronds. The construction of the huts is the same as the chicken huts in the Seminole villages with a floor about two feet above the ground.

When we arrived there there was considerable activity. Several of the men were cutting wood that was burned at the time when the women boiled coffee and cooked meat in an open fire. Other men were cutting down weeds and small palm trees that had grown up in the vicinity of their huts since the last Green Corn Dance. Some of the women were busy grinding the corn. The children were running, playing, and enjoying themselves. After the food was cooked over an open fire, the family sat on the elevated wooden floors of their huts and ate their meals.

Near the place where the Indians perform the Green Corn Dance there was a huge pile of logs that were used in building the fire around which the Indians were to dance. The dance track is about twenty feet wide and forty feet in diameter. In the center of this is built the dance fire.

Quite surprisingly, this being the day before the ceremony, there was a large number of men, women, and children, all singing, dancing around the fire. The dancing continued until after eleven o'clock.

The first day of the main festival was in a sense anticlimactic. The day passed quite calmly, and it seemed that the gathering was much like any group of people who have decided to go on a camping trip together. I found that the Indians were quite friendly to me although there was a distinct reserve in their attitudes toward the Medicine Man, Frank Shore.

By Dr. William C. Emerson

EDITOR'S NOTE

The author of this account of the Seminole Indian Green Corn Dance, Dr. William C. Emerson, a Rome, New York, physician and surgeon, is the first white man to have witnessed this important rite. Dr. Emerson, in the "Who's Who" section of the REFERENCE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF THE AMERICAN INDIAN, has written extensively on American Indian folklore including that of Alaska. He traces his interest in Indian folklore to his boyhood when his mother was a teacher at the Rose Bud Indian (Sioux) Reservation in South Dakota. He spends several months each year in the Everglades and has published several books on the SEMINOLE DWELLERS OF THE EVERGLADES; THE LAND OF THE MIDNIGHT SUN (Alaska); and LIFE AND CALL OF THE EVERGLADES, a collection of three Seminole folk stories.

In the summer of 1965, Dr. Emerson flew from Rome, New York, to Ft. Lauderdale, rented a car, and drove to Moore Haven on the western shore of Lake Okechobee. From Moore Haven, Dr. Emerson drove thirty miles north to the Brighton Indian Reservation. From there he was driven by his Indian guide thirty-four miles through Okechobee and across a trackless area to the site where the Seminoles were to hold their Green Corn Dance.

Dr. Emerson, now seventy-four years old, suffered great privations in order to witness the famed dance. He ate only canned and Puritan brand food, wore a heavy raincoat, and slept fitfully on an elevated wooden platform while the Indians danced and sang in revelry. Dr. Emerson's account of his days gives an intimate picture of Seminole life at festival time.

The Florida Seminoles Indians are a resilient people. For many years they have lived on their reservations, located in the Florida Everglades, perfectly happy and content, minding their own business and white men only at times when they are in need of work in order to obtain money for the purchase of the necessities of life.

Prior to the arrival of the Seminoles in Florida, they belonged to the Creek confederacy of tribes which lived in Alabama and Georgia. This settled agricultural people had an ancient feud with the Creek Indians. The autumn festival was a time for renewing social ties and a time of amnesty for criminals. Old plots were broken, new fires were lit, new clothing was put on, and religious ceremonies were performed. The ceremony lasted from four to eight days, depending on the size of the settlement. The festivities included the drinking of the Green liquid and a mock execution. Dances, imitations of animals or the hunt were performed, and some accounts tell of the choosing of new marital partners in a dance.

From the time the Seminole Indians settled in Florida, in 1750, they continued to have many customs and ceremonies which they had inherited for many years before coming to Florida. The first record of a Green Corn Dance in Florida was in the spring of 1841 during the war between the Seminole Indians and the United States. During the ceremonies at this dance a council of the remaining chiefs decreed death to any white man found dividing the secrets of their sacred dance.

The site of the Green Corn Dance is selected by the Seminole Indians. It is more from time to time according to the Medicine Man of the Cow Creek Seminole Indians, Frank Shore, the Green Corn Dance, which is celebrated each year on the Brighton Indian Reservation. The dance is held in the same area for the past forty years.

The Green Corn Dance is held by the Seminoles when the corn ripens in the early summer about the first of June or the first of July. The time is selected according to the new phase of the moon, which Seminoles call "Everything Green."

Each group of the major Seminole tribes, Cow Creek, Big Cypress, and Tamiami Trail, which celebrates the festival of the Green Corn Dance, has a different name. # Seminole Green Corn Dance

Shore. We had a nice, friendly visit, and Frank Shore explained to me the dance about which I had heard so much never before sundown on the first two days of the festival.

Frank Shore was Medicine Man because his father before him had been. The post is handed down from father to son and carries with it great prestige. While the Medicine Man's functions are largely ceremonial, he wields strong influence on the affairs of the tribe. His presence pervades the festival.

He chooses the site. He is constantly busy there, offering suggestions about where to dig for water, overhauling preparations, and playing a central role in virtually all the ceremonies. Frank Shore explained the festival schedule to me.

On the first day there are a group of folk dances which have no known historical or allegorical significance. They begin about sundown and end about eleven o'clock. Frank Shore told me that the Indians were for these dances means being happy and enjoying themselves. There is much laughter and singing.

The second day's schedule is very like that of the first day. During the daylight hours the adults visit among the huts. The children play a kind of ball, and the atmosphere within the camp is quite relaxed. During these two days I spent most of my time meeting and talking with various families, trying to get to know these people. Aside from the reserve which I have mentioned, I found them charming, if perhaps unamiable to strangers.

I began to feel somewhat bored, and by this time, I was positively hungry. The food that the Indians eat, a stew made from corn and beans, was not very palatable to me, although they were generous in their offers to share it. My canned food, washed down with warm Pepsi-Cola, quickly became my mainstay.

In the evening at sunset the dances began once more. The dancing lasted about an hour longer than the first night. Once the dances continued longer than the first night.

The third day is known as Picnic Day. It is Frank Shore's responsibility to see that a picnic feast for everyone. In years past there would occur hunting parties, and they would bring back deer to the camp. Now the problem is handled more expeditiously. Huge slices of beef are purchased, and the families prepare them in their own fires. There is no need to take the deer to the dance track. Here the men are involved in the Buffalo Dance. No women participate in this particular dance, and on that day they are not allowed to step onto the track until noon.

Frank Shore leads the men in an over more furious dance. The movements are so fast that they are like a blur. For buffalo, an animal upon whom the forefathers of the Seminoles had been largely dependent for food and clothing. He has a great interest in the Buffalo Dance. There is no reason in a rehearsal pattern that seems to gather momentum as the dances progress.

On the fourth day one or another of the men leave the dance track and take some of the most left at the edge of the festival.

In the east, the men and boys of the tribe strip to their shorts. They walk to a tent specially prepared as a kind of stand bath by the Medicine Man. In the center of this tent is a bed of hot rocks taken from the bottom. Frank Shore, the Medicine Man, pours over these rocks a "medicine," the ingredients of which are known only to him. As the men move slowly through the tent, they walk through a cloud of steam which opens their pores, and they are cleansed. Following this primitive sauna, each man is rubbed down vigorously with corn cobs by the ubiquitous Medicine Man.

The Medicine Man then scratches their arms with a needle dipped into more of his medicine. Since this happens once each year and because each scratch leaves a parallel mark, one can tell at a glance how many years a man has been part of the festival. Following this ritual they bathe in a water hole and put their clothes back on.

FRANK SHORE, MEDICINE MAN, HIS WIFE AND DAUGHTER.

In years past the Medicine Man used either an animal claw or a snake fang for the vaccinations. Frank Shore used a needle on a stick.

The Green Corn Dance has a manifold purpose. Through the dances each man is purified. The medicine he will receive during the festival will, therefore, become truly effective, insuring health to the participants. They will be able to partake of the corn that plays an enormous part in their diet when it has a chance to ripen.

The poor Indian women are left to fend for themselves. All the central mysteries of the festival are forbidden to them. They are seen at the festival, but they are not allowed to step onto the track until noon.

Troop 601 Camping Trip Encounters Damp Weekend

The weekend of April 27 and 28th will be remembered by the troop for some time. It was the first time in two years that the troops encountered rain. A hard hitting electrical storm with winds gusting up to 45 mph enveloped Big Cypress Saturday afternoon from 3:40 p. m. until 4:15 p. m. dropping over an inch of water and small hail stones. In the big ball game the Glades Patrol came from behind in the last inning to drop the Panther Patrol in a hard fought game.

In observance of Governor Kitz's ban on fire, the troop made no first but relied on pre-cooled foods. This hampered advancement so far as cooking was concerned but also agreed that with the woods so dry it was worth missing out on this phase of scout craft.

One misplaced spark could destroy thousands of acres of timber and brushland leaving hundreds of wild creatures without shelter or food and killing many in the fire itself.

Advancement, swimming, fishing, ball games and hikes made up the weekend.

Church services were conducted by Weyman Bussey and Tony Martinez Sunday morning. Bible passages were read to show the close harmony of Scouting and God, and to emphasize the 12th part of Scout Law "A Scout is Reverent."

La ciudad, para la preparación para la temporada de ciclones que es Junio 1, de noviembre 20, va a subsistir, considerando a algun contrainjerto privado la poca popular tarea de podar los árboles en los parques de la ciudad de West Palm Beach, segun declaracion del superintendente de la limpieza asistiendo.

Las matas de coco están llenas de cocos, y estos son sumamente peligrosos durante los huracanes. Hay que cortar las matas, para cortar los cocos. Por eso desean tener un contrato con una compañía privada para evitar estos peligros.

Lake Harbor School

Future ballerinas and Olympians winners were predicted last week during the Lake Harbor Elementary School May Day Festival.

Opening the gala event was the Maypole Dance with forty-seven participants gracefully, colorfully, and musically wrapping and unwrapping the Maypole. The breaking of a single streamer did not damp the performers.

Following this were many events for which a variety of choicest of the entire school had been previously arranged into opposing teams of "blues" and "red-greens". The blast for the first afternoon was dignified by such names as soft ball, relay races, sack race, broad jump, and tug-of-war. In the last event there was so much "power" that the "rug" broke eight times, resulting in the power on each side during the earth! Each event was manned or "womaned" by a teacher. At the conclusion of the first afternoon the red-greens were leading with a score of 420 1/2 while the blues registered 392 1/2 on the scoreboard.

That evening was Open House for the parents. The cafeteria was resplendent with May flowers—Easter lilies, anemones, Queen Anne's Lace, and roses. Mrs. Alphonso Harrell, our librarian, graciously assisted by six students.

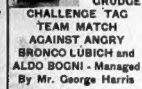

Second day, the fun was continued with volleyball, soft ball, races, dodge ball, and kick ball, at the end of which the Red-Greens were victorious with a score of 5321, and the Blues 4735. All the winners were awarded a whole poppicle, and the losers half a poppicle.
